

WAR AND PEACE STUDIES FELLOWS PROGRAM

The year-long War and Peace Studies Fellows Program brings together students from across the sciences, social sciences, and humanities to engage in an ongoing discussion of the social, political, moral and technological dimensions of international conflict and cooperation.

PROGRAM ACTIVITIES

Each year the War and Peace Fellows help organize a series of events on campus, including presentations by internationally renowned experts, films on topics related to war and peace, and discussions with Dartmouth faculty. They also attend small group events with speakers and learn about the wide range of career paths available for young people considering working on these issues. Fellows are expected to participate in scheduled events in at least two of the three terms (fall, winter, spring).

WASHINGTON DC

The year culminates with an extraordinary weekend in Washington, DC, led by Professor Ben Valentino, War & Peace Studies Coordinator. Participants meet with policy makers, military officers, think-tank researchers, activists and NGO officials—including many Dartmouth alums—working on issues of war and peace. Students have access to high-level policy makers in Congress, the Pentagon, State Department, Intelligence Community, and beyond, who are shaping the approach to issues including human rights, terrorism, military policy and the environment.

APPLICATIONS

The War and Peace Studies Program invites applications from prospective Fellows each Spring. Ordinarily, Fellows must be enrolled at Dartmouth during two of the three terms of participation, although applications from students who will be on campus in one off-term are considered. Fellows are initially appointed for a single year, but are typically reappointed for additional years.
